School Report Card 2009

The Camden City Public Schools is showing progress in many areas as noted in the annual School Report Card (2009). Strides are being made and academic programs are making a difference for our students.

Our schools are doing comparably as well this year as last based on the AYP math and literacy scores and overall, 26 schools have met safe harbor either in math or literacy and we have 4 sites that met all 41 indicators in both math and literacy. 3 schools are currently in "safe harbor" in both math and literacy while several schools have progressed to "hold" status and we are confident that they will make AYP in 2009-10.

Our schools have met state standards in attendance again this year (2009), and many schools have an average daily attendance over 96%.

There is more work to be done, but we have high expectations for our students and know that our efforts and our students efforts will lead us to our goal of creating schools of excellence in Camden City.
